FIFA and Konami started recording this data in 2013, and this year they've tweaked the technology to enable better player animations, more fluid movement and more responsive gameplay. Fans can test their skills in three different competitions: "Training Mode," a practice match; "Player Career," a mode where you try to build a career as a footballer; and the big one: a full football game with 22 real-life players. In full-body motion capture suits, we interviewed three FIFA players to find out what it's like to play with this data, and whether or not Konami's new technology has made them feel more immersed in gameplay. Watch the new FIFA demo in action below. And if you have time, check out our breakdown of the demo here. Gameplay Settings Gameplay Settings offers FIFA a more authentic playing style, from a customisable "styles" menu allowing you to change the play-style of the AI teams — all 22 real-life team have been recreated with their own tactical setups and tactics — to five new special play-styles. There's also 11 stadiums and 22 kits to choose from, including new kits from Adidas, Nike, Puma and Umbro. Here's a look at the 11 stadiums featured in the demo: • Parc Olympique Lyonnais — Paris, France • St. Mary's Stadium — Maryland, US • Veltins-Arena — Gelsenkirchen, Germany • Luzhniki Stadium — Moscow, Russia • Dinamo Stadium — Riga, Latvia • Aalborg Stadion — Aalborg, Denmark • Trnava Stadium — Trnava, Slovakia • Steaua Stadium — Bucharest, Romania • FC Barcelona's Camp Nou Stadium — Barcelona, Spain • Vasco da Gama Stadium — Curitiba, Brazil • Montreal Olympic Stadium — Montreal, Canada All these stadiums are playable in the demo as well, including the new FIFA 22 kits and stadia coming with Season Ticket. Storyline The FIFA Story Mode carries over from the 21st game, with three compelling story arcs to follow. The "My Journey" mode lets you play as any of the 20 national teams through 18 years, from 1994 to 2012, including a two
