We have a long-lived PHP solution running on a server running Debian, Apache/2.0.54, PHP 5.4.12. We generally do not limit PHP to just the www-root and any mod_php solutions to add "php" to the /etc/apache2/sites-available/default file, but rather just run it from there. In the absence of any common practice, we have been leaving all of the "php" entries in the apache2 conf file blank, and we've been doing this for a few years. We don't run a PHP-specific error log, but we do have custom PHP error logging and an error level PHP parameter. We've been using our standard PHP error logging (ie. in the normal places and with custom logging) and it's been keeping everything from crashing, but we've recently found that PHP is d0c515b9f4

I have a table called DATE. It has several records of date where the field DATE is equal to 4-22-2018 on row 1 but different on row 2, etc... I want to use a while loop to access each date and perform some conditional logic. This is what I have so far, which is working fine, but I want to note that it is testing all of the dates in the table: SELECT * FROM DATE WHERE DATE = '4-22-2018' UNION SELECT * FROM DATE WHERE DATE = '4-22-2018' UNION SELECT * FROM DATE WHERE DATE = '4-22-2018' UNION SELECT * FROM DATE WHERE DATE = '4-22-2018' UNION SELECT * FROM DATE WHERE DATE = '4-22-2018' UNION SELECT * FROM DATE WHERE DATE = '4-22-2018' UNION SELECT * FROM DATE WHERE DATE = '4-22-2018' UNION SELECT * FROM DATE WHERE DATE = '4-22-2018' UNION SELECT * FROM DATE WHERE DATE = '4-22-2018' The query above returns three results but it is processing the dates above. A: You should use JOIN instead of UNION SELECT * FROM DATE INNER JO
