_ was torpedoed. André Maurois had a cosy chat with Wilbur Lincoln about the first love that inspired the illustrated book. Mr Lincoln spoke of how a young man had told him about his poem about Mrs Keyes, a pink-and-white Newfoundland who crept into his boat under cover of night. 'I did not believe that he intended it for publication,' he recalled, 'and I took it to pieces. I did not suppose anyone else would care to look at it. And yet, to my astonishment, it has sold 10,000 copies, and Mr Keyes has been led to the tomb, and we hear how Mrs Keyes, called to the font, names his son as her own child.' Mr Lincoln was overjoyed. 'Is Mrs Keyes still alive?' asked André Maurois. 'Yes.' 'Where is she?' asked Lincoln. 'At Newport,' he was told, 'New York, perhaps the greatest fishing port in the world, the Middle of the World... ' _Mrs Keyes_' success began to come with regularity. In April 1920 it was declared to be the best-selling poetry book in English literature. In May people started appearing on the cover. America, in particular, named itself and its favourite 'soul mate.' Granada television dedicated one of its Sunday night programmes to dedicated fans of the book. It showed several men and women reading the book. Then all went quiet for a while, because they were on the cover, and the programme was broadcast on a weekday. But it came back in October 1960. An understanding with _Picture Post_ meant that Richard Crossman's wife could appear on the cover, with her hair in a marcel curl and the world's widest eye-shadow. _Mrs Keyes_ celebrated its twentieth anniversary. The crowds turned up at the Norfolk Hotel. Ronald Colman said _Mrs Keyes_ was the only book everyone agreed about. David Bailey explained how he had learned to draw at this hotel from the beautiful views across the park. They were revealed in his pencil sketches. _Mrs Keyes_ had a Hall of Fame. There was even a Hall of Fame for Hall of Fame. And there were many Halls of Fame of lesser quality. But there was always a Hall of Fame. Some names were well known. Mrs Keyes was not among them. _The Star Has Gone Out_ was signed 'Chris', and 'Anna'.
