Made with motion capture data from Steve Ballmer, the smartest man in the world, Twisted Pixel has created this game to show you, the players, that he is the smartest man in the world. Re-assembled into a single game by the people who brought you the critically acclaimed cult favorites Super Ghouls 'n Ghosts and Costume Quest, Splosion Man is a game for anyone who is crazy enough to think they can take on the super hero of consumer electronics, Steve Ballmer. The game features simple controls and intuitive gameplay. Gamers who are feeling heroic can try out the first level in a new split screen mode, while those who love to see Steve living his best life can sit back and watch the character grow throughout the game. The controls are simple, once you get the hang of them, like MOB for the majority of missions.

You'll engage in the action and have the power to play along with the movement of the game's main character, Steve. He'll propel himself through the levels. He'll shoot out webs. He'll walk past Big G in the side-view. He'll crash into the kitchen. Steve will see his friends off at work, saying, "Goodbye, everyone! I'll see you all tomorrow!" And you'll see your friends off too. They'll all say good-bye until they're behind the walls of the building, when you'll say, "Goodnight, where's Steve?" They'll all stare at you in horror as they realize Steve is completely missing from their lives. Steve will run onto the beach, saying, "Well, what a day, what a day." You'll say, "Oh, Steve, where the hell are you?" And you'll run as fast as you can because you'll figure out that Steve has decided to give himself a free day, and everyone else's vacation should be canceled. That's his right as the best man in the world, and you don't need to say it twice. Steve will be sitting at the foot of the stairs and you'll say, "Goodnight, where's Steve?" And then you'll be forced to explain why you're not on vacation this year, because Steve doesn't believe in you taking a vacation, even when you want to. He doesn't think you're worth being on a vacation with, so he's just decided to take an indefinite vacation. Goodnight, Steve. Steve will find himself in a tech store, looking
