I have a class where I have to store it's number of instances and also each instances needs to have some other instance in a linked list. Ex : class A { public void addLinkedList(LinkedList linkedList) { // in addLinkedList we need to store number of instances and also each instance needs to have its linked list } } Any suggestion on how to design this class? A: You might want to use immutable objects. Given you are dealing with collections of B, the flyweight pattern seems particularly applicable: class A { private final List cachedB = new ArrayList(); void addLinkedList(LinkedList linkedList) { cachedB.add(linkedList.get(0)); } public void addLink
