Not only that, but they're somehow lighter than the previous v2.2.0 engine. And in a nod to its home-market Ferrari Dino, there's a dual-port fuel injection on the v2.3.0 engine. The engine itself uses a dual-runner cross-plane crankshaft pattern. The transmission is a four-speed, racing-style manual, with a push-button gearshift. There's a power-operated sliding rear window, and there are special "All-Terrain, low profile" Continental 7" tires. The roofline is lowered by five mm, and there is a rear spoiler. The v2.3.0 is further distinguished from its v2.2.0 predecessor by its black front grille, black front nose, and black rear cover. For the street market, the new v2.3.0 will be priced similarly to v2.2.1 at $149.99, and will be available in a total of four configurations: v2.3.0/3.2.0 LE hybrid, normal street, low-profile all-terrain, and XUV (Japanese) tourist car configurations. Some of the components of the v2.3.0, such as the cross-plane crankshaft, are only available in the 3.2.0 LE version. That version will also include the 1-3 inch universal turbo downpipe and 1-3 inch mechanical wastegate, plus other parts that are only available in the LE version. Additionally, the XUV 1.5 liter v2.3.0 LE will be priced at $289.99. And, for those who want to see what the Hildebrand Racing Formula 1 engine is capable of, the Russian market will be getting its first taste of this engine. Hildebrand Racing is the same tuner that builds the VK10/30 engine for the Russian Le Mans Prototypes. The tuner will feature a reworked 2.3 liter-specification engine that made over 400 horsepower in testing. Hildebrand Racing's LMP2 racer, the V2.3.1, is ready to head back into action now with a new engine upgrade.
